The Avebury Landscape: Field Archaeology of the Marlborough Downs

The unique Neolithic monuments around Avebury, the stone circles and avenues, Windmill Hill causewayed enclosure, West Kennett Long Barrow and Silbury Hill are well known throughout the World and attract large numbers of visitors throughout the year. Less notice is taken of the superb archaeological remains of all periods that remain elsewhere across the Marlborough Downs. These range from the extensive barrow cemeteries, ancient fields and enclosures of pre-history, to traces of deserted villages of Roman and Medieval provenance.

English Heritage, various universities and individuals have all been engaged on research into aspects of this ancient and historic landscape and will present and discuss recent results that provide a new perspective on the past. A panel of speakers will present extensive air and ground surveys along with targeted geophysics and environmental reviews. These will provide a backdrop to a number of period reassessments that consider the development and change in landscape use from the earliest times to the present day.

The conference/dayschool fee of £25 includes coffee, lunch and tea.
