Dying Matters Week from CDAS
12-18 May 2014
Bath, various locations

Dying Matters; and this year the Centre for Death & Society are hosting a series of events to get you talking about it.

Dying Matters Week - bookable events

'Death in Bath: A sometimes surprising stroll exploring dying in the city', with the Bread, Print and Roses Collective Tuesday 13th May, 12.30 – 13.45
Walking tour starting in Widcombe, Bath

'A great way to go', Funeral planning workshop with celebrant Su Chard
Wednesday 14th May, 13.45 – 15.45

'Everything you ever wanted to know about death & dying but were too afraid to ask'
Thursday 15th May, 19.30 – 21.00
Bath Royal Literary and Scientific Institution, Queen’s Square, Bath

Get involved
Come to one of our events - all are free, everyone is welcome and you can ask us anything. Can't make it? Ask a question in advance. Bookings and questions to cdas@bath.ac.uk

Visit us on the Parade at the University of Bath over lunchtime on Monday and Tuesday; we want to hear what you would have played at your funeral #BathFuneralMusic. Take our digital afterlife quiz, pick up some information on organ donation, or write down the five things you best want to be remembered for.

Tweet #YODO @DyingMatters. This national campaign by Dying Matters, You Only Die Once, aims to raise awareness about how important it is for people to talk about these issues. You can follow CDAS on twitter @cendeathso ciety

Organisations are welcome to send literature for distribution at our various events, please contact cdas@bath.ac.uk for details. You are also welcome to send a representative to the panel events – please contact us to discuss further. More information at http://www.bath.ac.uk/cdas/news/news_0021.html
CDAS Conference 2014: Social Death
07-08 June 2014
Bath Royal Literary and Scientific Institution, Bath
£100 weekend, £55 single day

Our call for papers has resulted in an excellent response and packed programme for this year’s CDAS conference on Social Death. A draft programme is now available on our website. Unfortunately, the number of abstracts we have received does mean that there is no space for late papers, but we are happy to consider ideas for posters.

If you would like to submit a poster for the conference, please contact us at cdas@bath.ac.uk with a short (250 word) abstract by the end of April for consideration.

Booking for the conference is now open, and as with all CDAS events, it is open to anyone to attend. Further information about the conference and a link to the booking form can be found on the CDAS website: http://www.bath.ac.uk/cdas/events/news_0010.html

New CDAS Associate Sam Carr

CDAS are pleased to welcome Dr Sam Carr, a lecturer in the Department of Education at the University of Bath, as an Associate.

Sam has a particular interest in exploring human relationships and their role in shaping our psychological experiences through the lifespan. To this end, attachment theory (as a way of thinking about and understanding relationships) is one of his favoured frameworks. He is equally intrigued by (a) the impacts of our close attachments on our existence and (b) the impacts of broader social and political structures upon our attachment bond formation and psychological experiences.

He is currently working (with Professor Malcolm Johnson) on projects (a) using attachment theory as a tool for understanding the notion of biographical pain in later life, and (b) linking attachment theory to dementia.

Where next for funerals?

Kate Woodthorpe was asked to write a guest blog post for the International Longevity Centre-UK following our successful joint event in January. Below is an excerpt, you can read and comment on the full post at http://blog.ilcuk.org.uk/2014/04/23/guest-blog-kate-woodthorpe-where-next-for-funerals/www.bath.ac.uk/cdas           cdas@bath.ac.uk

‘Following our successful event in January with the ILC I have been reflecting on how we can elevate funerals up the social and political agenda. One issue that I return to again and again is the universality of some kind of ritual after someone has died, and the need to dispose of the body. My colleague, Dr John Troyer, has recently argued here that peoples’ unwillingness to talk about what they want to happen after they have died is not because it is taboo, but because they are not encouraged to talk about it enough. Certainly, this is what I regularly encounter in my day job: when I tell people what I research and ask for their opinion they are typically more than able and willing to discuss funerals they have been to and what they would like to happen at their own.’

You can read more about Kate on her staff page, and about this research in particular on our research pages. You can contact Kate at k.v.woodthorpe@bath.ac.uk

Death isn’t taboo, we’re just not encouraged to talk about it

Our Deputy Director, Dr John Troyer, contributed a piece to The Conversation this month looking again ideas of ‘taboo’.

‘Contrary to the popular wisdom that it’s a taboo subject, we love discussing death. Dead bodies fascinate us and some of our favourite television shows have been about death and forensic pathology.’

Law Society urges people to leave instructions for their digital legacy

This solicitors’ organisation warns that too much valuable, intellectual property is in danger of being lost when we die.

As technology evolves, so does the way in which we store our information. Failing to keep records of your accounts and how you want the contents dealt with after you die are adding to the difficult job of families who are left to make sense of what is left behind.

Two past CDAS Annual Conferences have dealt with this very issue: see the past events section on our website for details.

The Commercial and Moral Economies of Death and Dying in Working-Class Victorian England
02 May 2014
Centre for Employment Studies Research, UWE, Frenchay Campus, Bristol

We are delighted to host a special CESR seminar with Dr Helen Frisby. From its Seventeenth Century roots, 'the dismal trade' witnessed exponential growth during the Nineteenth and early Twentieth Centuries – often, it has been widely assumed, at the expense of the so-called 'moral economy' of customary relationships between the living and with the newly dead. In this talk, however, Helen will argue that the commercial and moral economies of death, dying and disposal were in fact by no means mutually exclusive during this period; rather, their interaction helped create positive spaces for the exercise of working-class social and emotional agency.

Dr Helen Frisby is an internationally recognised authority on the history of death, dying and disposal in Victorian England. She is an Associate Lecturer in History at UWE, Bristol, and a Teaching Fellow at the University of Bath. She is presently writing a monograph on the moral economy of the Victorian working-class funeral.

Attendance is free, but places are limited. To reserve your place, e-mail cesr@uwe.ac.uk or call +44 (0) 117 32 83435. For more information: http://www1.uwe.ac.uk/bl/bbs/research/cesr/cesrseminars.aspx

Before I Die: A Festival for the Living about Dying
12-18 May 2014
Various locations around the University and City of York

Professor Celia Kitzinger, Festival Curator - “It gives me great pleasure to invite you to the 'Before I Die' Festival – a festival for the living about dying. We will include music, art, poetry, theatre, public lectures, debates, expert panels, and “death café” conversations over tea and cake.”

The festival is sponsored by the University of York and organised as part of the ‘Dying Matters’ coalition Dying Awareness Week. It is part of a growing social movement to reflect on how we manage death and dying.

Events include:
- An Instinct for Kindness – a solo-show telling the true story of Chris Larner’s journey to Dignitas, the assisted suicide clinic in Switzerland, with his chronically ill ex-wife.
- For Their Own Good (United Artists) - a play which combines beautiful puppetry, new writing and documentary material to tell a moving and darkly comic tale which explores whether the way we kill animals teaches us anything about our own demise.

- Music and Poetry to Die For –Soloist Alison Wray and Chanticleer Singers, with poetry from James Nash.
- Memorials in the Minster - Tours of the Minster focusing on artefacts associated with memorial.
- Expert Panel on Advance Decisions for end-of-life planning. Convened by Celia Kitzinger - includes experts in law, medicine, ethics and more to answer your questions.
- Advance Decision Writing 'Clinic': One-on-one sessions on writing your own Advance Decision – information & support from people involved with the charity Compassion in Dying.
- The Sociology of Death and Dying – an afternoon of workshops and seminars with members of the Sociology Department at the University of York.
- Dying to Live: Preparing yourself and your loved ones for death – a talk by the Revd Canon Dr Christopher Collingwood (Chancellor of York Minster) & Rev'd Dr David Efird (Philosophy Dept, University of York) about the spirituality of dying.
- Death Café - an opportunity to discuss thoughts, attitudes and questions about death and dying in a welcoming and open environment.
- Expert Panel – Should we legalise assisted dying?

Natural Death Salon – with Josefine Speyer
18 May 2014
London

The young, award winning funeral director Poppy Mardall will be our special guest in this Salon to talk about her work of family-led funerals. Poppy launched Poppy’s Funerals in 2012 to help people take creative control of their funerals. She wanted to create simple and affordable choices for families looking for an alternative to the expense and formality of the traditional funeral.

Josefine will talk about organising funerals with the help from family and friends, burials on private land, without the use of a funeral director. Poppy and Josefine hope to inspire you, to think about what kind of funeral you might wish for yourself, inform you about possibilities and how to create something that is meaningful and beautiful and within your budget. There is plenty of time for sharing of experiences and lively discussion. There will be a small buffet to accompany teas and coffee during the break.

For more information and to book please contact Josefine: josefine@josefinespeyer.com

“Do Not Attempt Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (DNACPR) orders: current practice and problems – and a possible solution”.
Thursday 12 June 2014, 12:30 – 14:30
Room C1071, Medical School, QMC
DNACPR orders are common, with around 80% of those who die in hospital dying with one in place. They are, however, associated with several problems: they are completed on an 'ad hoc' basis; there are national and regional variations in their use and remit; neither doctors nor patients like initiating conversations about resuscitation decisions; DNACPR orders are often misunderstood to mean that other treatments should be withheld; patients with DNACPR orders often get fewer potentially beneficial treatments than those without them.

In this seminar, I will review the literature associated with DNACPR orders, and discuss the development and evaluation of an alternative approach, the Universal Form of Treatment Options (UFTO).

We will start with light refreshments at 12:30, presentation will commence at 13:00.

The event is free of charge but please express your interest in attending the lecture via e-mail: julie.corden@nottingham.ac.uk or telephone: 0115 8230878.

The 10th International Conference on Grief and Bereavement in Contemporary Society (10th ICBG)

ICGB is a tri-annual event where global leaders in Thanatology and experts in various death-related disciplines meet to share their work and insights on issues of loss, trauma and mortality. Themed "East Meets West: Expanding Frontiers and Diversity", the 10th ICGB will come to Asia for the very first time, aiming to serve as a focal point of intellectual and academic endeavor for Hong Kong, China, and Southeast Asia, while acting as a gateway and forum for scholarship with the rest of the world.

Full details including workshops, speakers and a full schedule are now available on the website; early bird registration closes at the end of April.

Social Aspects of Death, Dying and Bereavement (DDB) Study Group

14 November 2014
BSA London Meeting Room, Imperial Wharf
Venue details can be found at: http://www.britsoc.co.uk/events/meetingroom.htm

Theme: Death, Inequality and Social Difference

Death and bereavement are considered universal experiences. Death is one of the few certainties in life and something which will inevitably affect us all. But this common adage can also mislead. Whilst many might expect to experience loss and we all face our own eventual demise, we do so in diverse cultural, societal, institutional, political and material contexts. We die differently, and in some cases with inequity as a defining feature of this experience. This year’s symposium will critically explore this diversity and ask timely and pertinent questions about a range of issues related to social divisions at the end of life.
We invite papers that theoretically and empirically engage with the theme of this year’s symposium. It is anticipated that topics covered by this call could include, but are not limited to: how groups experience disadvantage, on the basis of age, gender, race, ethnicity, religion, sexuality, social class, disability and/or circumstances such as imprisonment, homelessness, drug use, poverty and disease/condition status; identity and intersectionality; implications for, and the implications of, social policy decisions relating to end of life; challenges for practice and service provision, including equity of access and organisational structures; global perspectives on and experiences of death and social difference; austerity and neo-liberalism; attitudes, prejudice and assumptions; concepts of stigma, vulnerability and marginality; and ethical and/or methodological issues of studying these areas.

Please send 250 word abstracts for 20 minute presentations to Erica Borgstrom, Julie Ellis and Kate Woodthorpe (BSADDB@gmail.com). Deadline for abstract submission is 17.00 Friday 19 September 2014.

Please visit the event website http://www.britsoc.co.uk/specialisms/DDB.htm#_activity to register and for further symposium details.
