Education with Psychology is a social science course that covers education, psychology, politics and sociology. Students can study the social and developmental contexts of childhood and youth in depth. Graduates from this course develop knowledge which can be applied to many complex real-life situations affecting childhood and youth such as education, mental health, and family life. As a result, graduates go on to a wide variety of different fields. Some choose to continue study and specialise in clinical or educational psychology, teaching or related roles is another common route, whilst others enter mental health, family outreach work or the charity sector.
